MARK HORTON / ARCHITECTURE

SEPTEMBER 23 | 6PM

The disciplined forms and refined materiality of Mark Horton's work embody his optimism that good architecture - one that captures the dynamic forces which give meaning to buildings and spaces - can better the lives of those who encounter it. His multifaceted practice is critically underpinned with the conviction that the small office can serve as a positive force within the community. From the outset, his practice has incorporated a gallery dedicated to encouraging public discussion about architecture, reflecting his belief that architects working in the pragmatic, everyday world can benefit from such intellectual engagement. Through these dual roles of architect and curator, he has helped raise awareness of design issues, thereby elevating the quality of design within the region.
